Natural Beauty

P.4~7

Nagi takes its name from the nearby Mt. Nagi. Affording a breathtaking view of the area from the top of the mountain, and serving as a backdrop for daily life in the town below, Mt. Nagi's majestic presence draws eager trekkers all year round.

While in Nagi, there are many ways you can enjoy nature's gifts. Complemented by a rich farming tradition, even within Japan Nagi boasts a reputation for quality produce. Go on, treat yourself!

Reflecting a focus on "lifelong learning", the town has a number of fascinating cultural landmarks, including the Nagi Museum of Contemporary Art.

Mt. Nagi

1,255m (Okayama Prefecture's 4th Tallest Mountain)

Designated as a national park, Mt. Nagi is a showcase for the diversity and beauty found in Japan's changing seasons. Starting with spring's new life, the landscape turns to a brilliantly rich green in summer, which in turn sets alight with autumn colour. Culminating with snow-clad winter vistas, the mountain is a sight at any point of the year.

Mountain Flowers Park

The view from the striking, fire-truck red of Tenkūbashi Bridge sets hearts soaring, as the sky melts into the green of the mountains. At its foot, seasonal flowers await those visitors with an eye for their charms. Or, if the fresh air has put you in the mood for a bit of jumping around, water play and green space is available for all to enjoy. The playground is definitely worth a closer look too - themed around the local Sanbutarō Legend - about a friendly giant whose very steps helped to shape Nagi!

Nagi is the perfect place to appreciate Japan's changing seasons, surrounded by scenery which brings out the best of a country characterized by a very distinct spring, summer, autumn and winter. The two landmarks for this spectacular shift are Mt. Nagi and the enormous Bodaiji Ginkgo Tree, but little hints of life can be found everywhere in a locale known for its harmony between town-life and nature.

Watching the passage of time for 900 years, the tree stands with an unmatched presence.

Bodaiji Ginkgo Tree

The Bodaiji Ginkgo Tree is nestled up the mountain side of Mt. Nagi National Park, recognized by the national government as a natural monument and a prefecture-wide symbol for Okayama.

According to legend, the influential Buddhist reformer Hōnen planted the tree when he began his initiation as a monk, following his statement that 'learning begins from the roots.'

40m tall and 13m wide, the Bodaiji Ginkgo Tree is one of the Yomiuri Shimbun's Top 100 Famous Trees of Japan for good reason. It is possessed of a storybook presence, all the more alive for the years it has passed.

Amidadou Temple Ginkgo Tree

According to legend, famed Buddhist monk Hōnen used a branch from this 'Parent Tree' to cut a walking stick which would go on to become the Bodaiji Ginkgo Tree. In 2015, DNA testing was done to both plants, with the evidence substantiating the story. Even without knowing this, the Amidadou Tree is undoubtedly a natural miracle, standing for 1,000 years, having reached a height of 13m and a width of 6.8m.

Tenmei Ginkgo Tree

During the Tenmei Era (1781-1789), heavy snow caused one of the Bodaiji Ginkgo Tree's large branches to split in half. The tip of this branch grew into the ground and became what is known as the Tenmei Ginkgo Tree. Like its parent, the tree has reached a massive size - 35.5m tall and 4.2m wide.

Yashiki Waterfall

A water source for surrounding habitation, the waterfall takes its name from the ruins of an estate left behind by a Japanese general during the Warring States era. Delightfully cool and clear, during the warmer parts of the year you will often find people playing in its shallows.

Jyabuchi Waterfall

Jyabuchi waterfall spills at the entrance to the trekking trail for Mt. Nagi - the slow thunder of the water over rocks is a great way to start the trail, made more interesting by being a key setting for the local Sanbutaro Legend. If you're curious about where a half-snake woman (who would give birth to a baby that grows up to be a giant) would live, the waterfall is worth a look.

奈義町現代美術館
Nagi Museum of Contemporary Art

Working from a base proposal by famed architect Arata Isozaki, Nagi MOCA is made up of three installations that are both elements of the museum's structure and art works in their own right. Pushing the established conceptions of what it means to experience art, we invite you to explore the manipulation of shape and light, to take a moment to reflect and meditate.

身近な情報収集の場
Nagi Library

Nagi's town library is built as part of the Museum of Contemporary Art, and the design sensibility is clear the moment you set foot inside. The light and natural environment outside pours through the windows, and suddenly the idea of powering through that pile of unread books seems a little less crazy.

Used by over 30,000 people a year with 54,000 items available for borrowing, the library is one of the most prominent in the region. Novels, reference and audiovisual materials, braille texts, CDs and DVDs are well furnished. Moreover, reflecting the town's focus on child raising, picture books and information on parenting are a forte. Events are held frequently, ranging from story-time to toy shows.

Kurobuta

Nearly 100% of Okayama's brand-name pork, kurobuta black pig, is raised in Nagi-cho. Kurobuta is fed to exacting standards of quality, with a special mix of barley and wood vinegar, and has come to represent the Japanese extra-special care in agriculture. The resultant pork is known for its tender juiciness, with a fresh flavour that opens into a rich sweetness.

Nagi beef

Nagi-cho's specialty cattle, known simply in Japanese as Nagi-beefu is an exceptionally high-grade wagyu beef that has found its way into fashionable restaurants around Japan. And for good reason: the breeding and care of Nagi-beefu has been refined over many generations, along with the pedigree of calf to cow. Recently Nagi-beefu has been recognised at the Wagyu Beef Prize Show, coming in at 2nd across the whole country.

Local Specialties

Kuromame black beans

Used in a number of popular products (the easiest way you'll be able to try it will be through the kuromame tea, sold in plastic bottles at supermarkets), Nagi's black beans have a distinct taste with many fans - both Japanese and foreigner.

Nagi-cho's particular soil and climate has lent itself to the cultivation of a number of primary specialties. For a long time now, local industries have focused on being competitive as high-end brands. Like much of Japan, agriculture cannot be performed on the scale of larger countries, so a focus on quality is a must - if you get the chance, please try some of the locally sourced food. We're confident you'll be able to tell the difference.

Satoimo

Nagi-cho's soil is rich in volcanic ash, widespread in the outlying region. The high breathability and ventilation of the ground is ideal for growing satoimo (taro), which can be prepared in a number of ways, mostly through simmering in dashi and soy sauce.
